Water...it's critical to life, health, and vitality. In fact, 65-70% of our bodies is water. Water plays a crucial role in cell communication and thousands of other bodily functions like digestion, circulation, skin health, and more. The cell is an extremely complex structure that utilizes organized water not only for enabling chemical reactions, but also for the receiving and sending of vital information.

Unlike normal, bound water, clustered water takes cellular hydration to a whole new level to help the body better transport nutrients, maintain proper communication between the cells, and remove toxins and waste more effectively. Research has shown that clustered water within the body is common in young healthy cells, but these levels diminish as we age.
